CONNECT SHARE IMPROVE

Who we are

The industry association for companies driving innovative information sharing for better public services

We're incorporated as a not-for-profit trade association to represent companies providing communication, network or application products and services to the public sector.

- We want to provide better services and work together for the common good.
- We bring together the collective strength of suppliers in ways that allow us to change our market place for the better.
- We continue the work achieved as PSNGB to bring the Public Services Network (PSN) to fruition, focusing now on safe information sharing and innovation in public service delivery.
- We're run by members for members.
- We understand the opportunities available and issues faced as we all deal with them day to day.

Why we're here

The biggest challenge facing Government is how to deliver the services we need when the books don't balance. With a massive spending deficit, we have to borrow £90bn a year just to keep the existing services running. The demand of course, is for better services.

PSN was a response to the need for more efficient use of networks, both in terms of how they are procured and how they can be interconnected for better sharing of resources. This has largely been done; the frameworks are in place, the market is lively and competitive, compliance is understood and there are some great examples of organisations using PSN to deliver shared hosting and applications.

It's not just about networks any more, the challenge is how to use PSN, cloud, mobile and security solutions to re-engineer much needed public services so that they are faster, better and cheaper.

At the core of that challenge is safe and effective information sharing. And to achieve that we need a collaborative, joined up approach that fuels the fantastic innovation potential that UK industry has in spades.

That is the purpose of Innopsis. To act as a catalyst in the transformation of our public services, harnessing the capability that industry can offer and making sure there is an open and effective commercial channel to where it is needed.

What we do

- We are a forum for policy makers, opinion formers, thought leaders and senior decision makers in the public sector to engage with industry and address the challenge of reforming public services.
- We focus on more effective information sharing using innovative technology to break down the barriers and improve outcomes.
- We harness the collective capability of industry against the biggest ICT challenges, promoting innovation and providing a platform for knowledge and idea sharing.
- We bring knowledgeable people together in focused teams to address a well-defined problem, to create inter-connectable services that operate together, yet in a vibrant marketplace
- We work with the Crown Commercial Service (CCS) to improve the procurement process and make sure that the public sector market place is accessible to all suppliers, that industry is delivering products that customers need and that they are affordable and easy to buy.
- We strive to use commercially available solutions wherever possible and resist bespoke requirements with special terms and conditions that add unnecessary cost.
- We have a point of view and we seek out the big challenges facing digital reform that need a joined up, collective effort to resolve.
- We will seek to work with the Cabinet Office including the Government Digital Service (GDS), with SoCITM, the LGA, HSCIC and any organisation that is striving to remove barriers and obstacles to public sector transformation.

Who we represent

- Innopsis represents companies with a passion to provide better services for the public sector.
- Our members include companies of all sizes, from specialist consultancies and SME service providers to corporates with a global presence.
- Innopsis represents them all equally, providing a forum to engage with the public sector, with important market influencers and with each other to work together for the common good.
